The Clark Scholarship Prize for the one who reads and spells the best at the close of the winter term, was given to Jared Williams.

Not absent or tardy during the year: Ellen J. Doherty, Alfred and Dana Pelton.

Your committee have thought it best to unite the North East with this school, and made arrangements with Mr. Kingsley to bring the pupils and teacher together, thus saving the town the expense of a separate conveyance, and have been well pleased with the result, not in expense alone, but also in the spirit of emulation which is thereby incited in the minds of the pupils and the opportunity which it has given to the teacher to develop more largely this spirit among her pupils.

The provision which the State has made, whereby the Tuition is paid for any pupil who may desire to attend a high school, has in a measure relieved the towns of the necessity of providing a school in town for such pupils. Yet your committee feel confident that the advantages which a good grammar school would give to our children would be beyond money value, and we hope, and expect, that the time is not far distant when such a school will be provided by the town and every family, where there are children, will consider it a great privilege to send their children to it.

Since the close of the winter term a beautiful picture, entitled "The Landing of the Pilgrims," has been received from a former teacher, Miss M. L. Raeder.

Twenty-one pupils were enrolled in this school at the beginning of the year, while only three were present at the close of winter term. This irregular attendance is very injurious to a school, but may be accounted for, in part at least, by the long distance that many of them have to walk and the age of the pupils, fifteen of the eighteen enrolled being under nine years of age, and the three who were present the last day, Harry Crandall, Casper Connery and Georgie Searle, were only seven and eight years old and had to walk, each of them, a mile or more. Georgie Searle has not been absent or tardy for two terms, and Casper and Harry only absent on account of sickness for a few days, and there are others who would be just as glad to be there every day as these boys, but it would be almost an impossibility for them to do so.

Wages of Teacher	$72 00

The pupils in this school have attended the center school two terms of the past year. Your committee made arrangements with Mr Kingsley to carry them for $2 50 a week, and your committee feel that this money has been well invested, as there would have been but three pupils if we had maintained a school here.

Your committee secured the services of Miss Clapp for the first term of the year, with the expectation of keeping her during the fall and winter term, if a boarding place could be secured nearer the school house, when the walking was bad. Miss Clapp secured a school with much larger pay, and we were consequently unable to keep her.

Both of these teachers have had the advantage of Normal instruction, and although they have not had a long experience in teaching, the help they have received from the Normal, enables them to do excellent work.

Considerable repairs are needed on this school house, and one side of the roof, perhaps both, need shingling.

REPORT

OF THE

School Superintendent.

TO THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE:

GENTLEMEN:—

The opportunities offered by the statute of 1895 providing a high school education for pupils of small towns at the expense of the state were quickly accepted by Westhampton. The number of our pupils in the high schools of Northampton and Easthampton is a credit to this town and its people. May that number continue to grow. In this connection the question of increased facilities at the center for preparing pupils for high school entrance is peculiarly important. The high schools which can be legally patronized are subject to the approval of the state board and, in the constant effort to strengthen their work, will doubtless gradually add to their requirements for admission. Already algebra has been added to the requirements of the Northampton high school and as that subject is begun in the ninth grade at Easthampton it will hereafter be expected at the high school there. Westhampton will not be the town to scrimp the outfit of the children it would send away to school. It is true that with competent teachers the requirements can be met in the outside schools. But to do the work required and do it best, both for those who go and those who stay or are to go later, the best and most efficient plan is to have at some convenient place, presumably at the center, a grammar school, for which, as a general rule the other schools maintained should do preparatory work. I bespeak for this matter your early and careful consideration.

TEACHERS.

Westhampton schools will continue to suffer so long as there is a lack of funds to be applied to salaries of teachers. At the salaries paid here there is little certainty of securing efficient teachers and less hope of retaining them.

The town has been fortunate in retaining the services of Miss Kingsley and Miss Whelan, whose work at the Center and South schools since September has been a credit to the teachers and of constantly increasing value to the town. So long as native talent of this quality is willing to serve the schools at the salaries paid, the town may consider itself favored.

CONVEYANCE OF PUPILS.

During a good portion of the year all the pupils attending the Hill and South schools could have been comfortably seated and instructed at either one of the school-houses. The advantages would have outweighed the disadvantages of combining these schools.

VERTICAL WRITING.

In many towns and cities of the country vertical writing has been adopted either permanently or as an experiment. In view of these experiments it has seemed unnecessary to make any trial of the system here. So far the evidence tends to show that (1) the vertical system is more easily taught than the slant, (2) is more rapidly learned, (3) because of its likeness to print is more useful in primary grades, (4) it is more hygienic, (5) the change from slant to vertical is made by schools with little difficulty and slight loss of time. It is the opinion of your superintendent that continued experiments will tend to confirm this evidence, and that the vertical style of writing will presently be in quite general use in schools.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

More attention than formerly has been given during the past year to the subject of civil government. An effort has been made to attach the study to some event that was passing; thus the November election, the assembling of congress and the general court, and the annual town meeting have each furnished live questions to be answered by the pupils. By a continuance and extension of this plan the subject matter of civil government may all be taught in the study of institutions and events with which the child can come into actual contact. So long as children continue to leave school at the age of fourteen or thereabouts such teaching will be necessary in the intermediate and grammar years if the schools do their full duty in preparing children for intelligent citizenship.

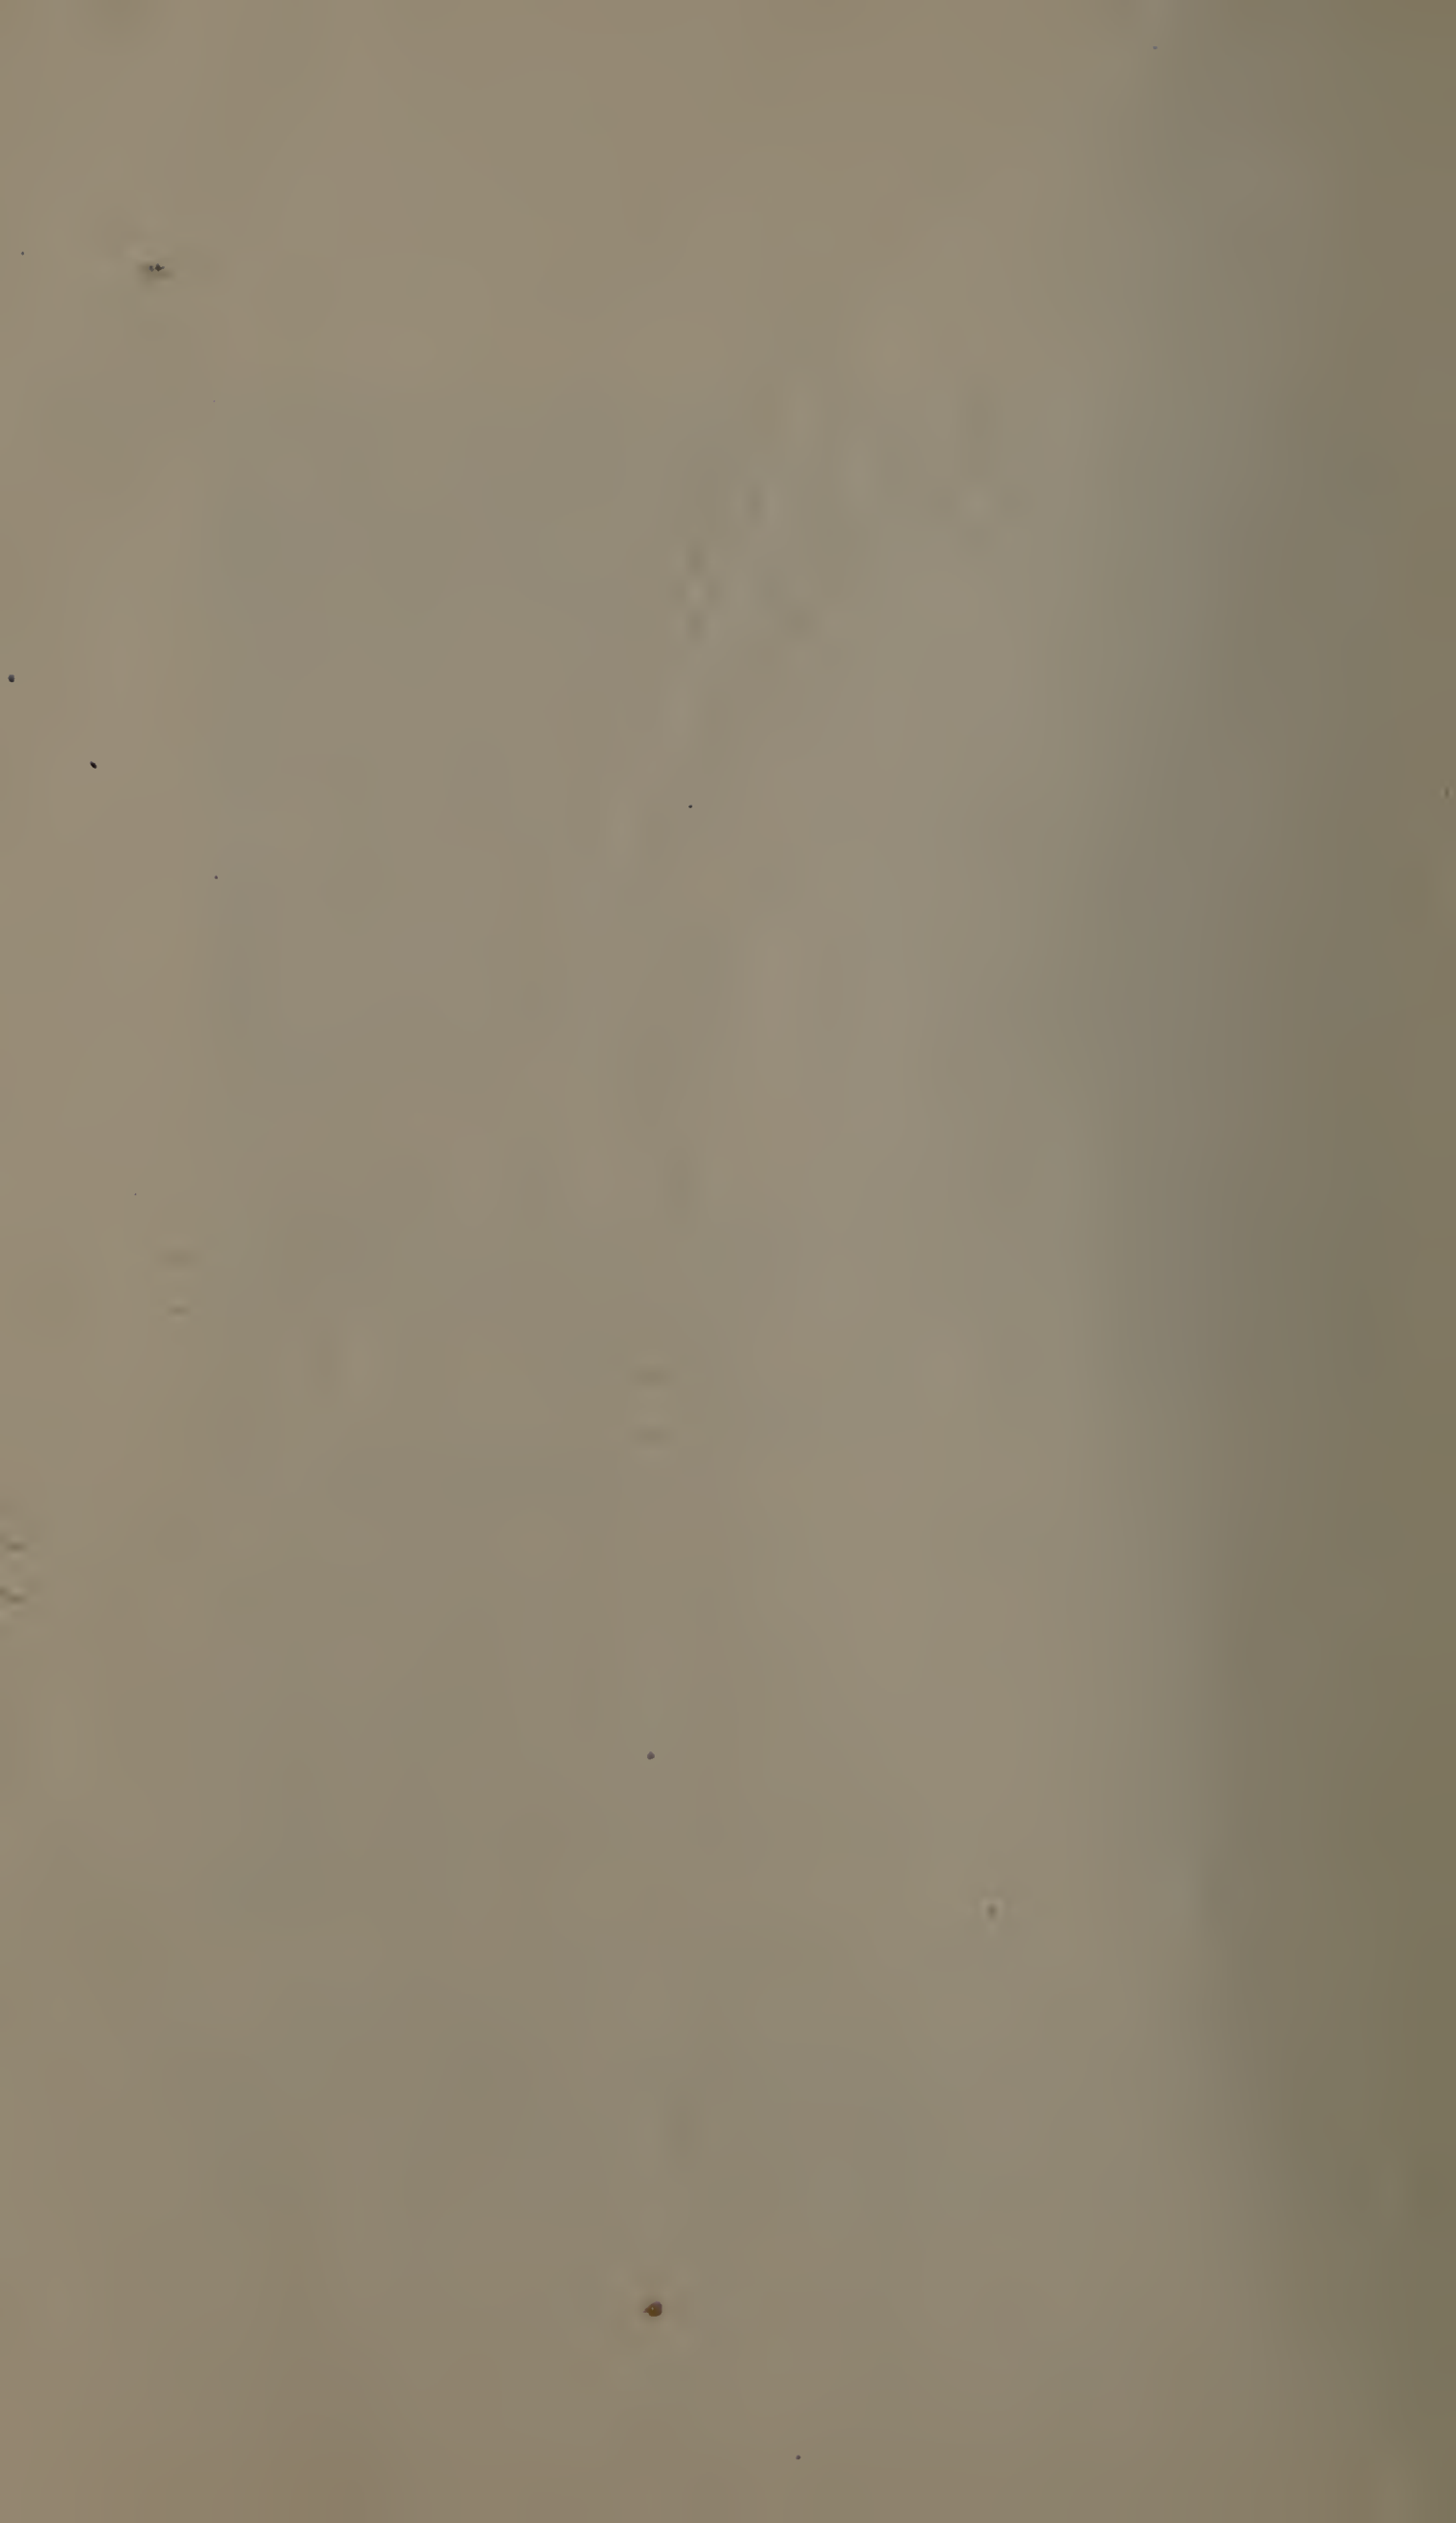

THE HIGHER VALUE.

While it seems natural to place a money value upon education, while parents may properly demand that in return for taxes or tuition the schools shall equip pupils with the wherewithal to earn a living, the nobler truth that there is a value in education beyond the money value is bound to press itself home to minds and hearts of all thoughtful people. Boys and girls should become something more than earners of a living. Squirrels earn a living. The boys and girls that are to be the men and women of higher usefulness will be those who can not only earn a living, but who have some tastes for living, who can make proper use of their hours of rest, who can practice the arts of peace in times of peace, who have such clear views of honor and truth that they can point the way to a higher individual and national life. To give the inspiration to this higher life is the noblest mission of the public school. Here the child should make an acquaintance with, and cultivate a taste for, the great books of the world. Here he should learn to appreciate the world's wonderful music. Here he should learn the language of the world's masterpieces of art. Here, finally, under the influence of the man or the woman of training, of culture, of character, who is his teacher, he should learn the lessons of manners and morals which complete the stature of the man the world needs.

Respectfully,

B. CLIFTON DAY.
